Bloomin' Big Deal: RHS Students Keep the Legacy (and the Smell) Alive

Roseville, CA - The tradition of RHS's rare Corpse Flowers continues to bloom, literally, thanks to a passionate new student group. Once adopted and cultivated by longtime RHS staff member CJ Addington, these endangered flowers have found new caretakers in the Think Green Club, a student-led organization dedicated to greenhouse upkeep, sustainable agriculture, and community connection.

Under the club's care, one of the three Corpse Flowers has recently bloomed, a remarkable event and a first for any high school in the world. Students are eager to share this once-in-a-lifetime experience with the community, inviting visitors to see the flower and learn about RHS's growing horticulture program.

"These plants mean so much to our students," said Jeffrey Underwood, RHS Science Instructor. "They're continuing CJ Addington's legacy while learning from UC Davis researchers and real-world horticulturists. It's exciting to see RHS students connecting hands-on science with community engagement."

The Think Green Club's efforts have already caught attention in the academic community, with photos of their plants featured in UC Davis lectures. The group continues to explore new scientific questions right from RHS's own greenhouse, one bloom at a time.

Community members and the media are invited to witness this extraordinary event, celebrate student innovation, and discover the many exciting programs thriving at RHS!
