PASSAGE I

"The Art of The Motorcycle"

[1]

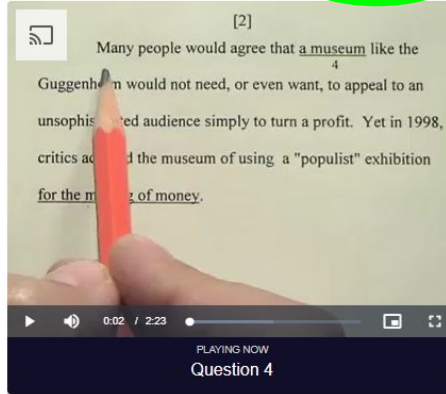

The Guggenheim Museum in New York City can rightfully claim a place ¹for the most distinguished art museums in the world. It not only houses paintings by masters such as Van Gogh, Cezanne, and Monet, it also ²contained an array of acclaimed sculpture, photography, and performance-art exhibits. Its formidable collection is displayed within an iconic building designed by Frank Lloyd Wright. The museum's well-known spiral-shaped cone is one of the most notable architectural achievements that you can

Given that all are true, which of the following (replacing "a museum") would be most relevant?

F. a venerable center of high culture

Many people would agree that a museum ⁴like the Guggenheim would not need, or even want, to appeal to an unsophisticated audience simply to turn a profit. Yet in 1998, critics accused the museum of using a "populist" exhibition for the sake of money.

While hiking through the dense forest, Mark instinctively froze as he spotted a large, but majestic, moose standing just a few feet away. The moose, with its large, curious eyes, seemed equally surprised to see Mark, staring back at him. For a few magical moments, man and animal stood still, silently acknowledging each other's presence. Then, with grace that seemed unusual for such a large animal, the moose trotted away, leaving Mark in awe of the unexpected and serene encounter.

Which of the following can be properly inferred from the given text?

A. The moose trotted away from Mark because it was hungry.

B. Mark's presence made the moose feel somewhat uncomfortable.

C. Mark got several pictures of the moose before it trotted

REVEAL CORRECT ANSWERS ON QUESTION REVIEW ON

Question #1 explanation

Understanding the question:

The question asks you to draw a reasonable inference from a literary text, which is a short passage describing an encounter between a person, Mark, and a moose in a forest. An inference involves reading between the lines or understanding implications that may not be explicitly stated in the text. This task helps us develop critical reading skills that enable us to comprehend and interpret complex texts effectively.
