

YOLENI JUAREZ

SELF-DIRECTED LEARNER

About Me

Hi! My name is Yoleni Juarez, i'm currently a Junior at Norwalk High School. I was born and raised in Norwalk, CT. I grew up speaking Spanish, and learning English at the same time. I grew up with support from my parents everyday and with my older brother and twin sister. My family has always taught me to stay motivated and always push forward. In school, my grades always mattered to me and I always tried to maintain my grade as an A or B. I aim to graduate with good grades to be successful after high school and be independent. In the future, I aspire to be an orthodontist but I also want to join the marines, so I'm still kind of stuck on what to decide for my future. Growing up, I never asked for help and started to figure things out on my own. As I get older, I find myself enjoying to learn new thing on my own, as well as teaching myself new things. I enjoy exploring topics that interest me and to dive deeper into them.

I am a Self-Directed Learner when I ...

Take responsibility for my own learning, focus on my personal goals, and work independently. I am committed to my responsibility and I show this by staying organized, completing my assignments on time, and always listening to instructions. When I'm not able to understand anything, I review my notes and practice until I improve. I believe this competency matches me the best because I am not very social, but I am motivated and I work best when I am working alone and manage my time responsibly. Small moments when I show this competency is when I stay focused in class, finish work without distractions, and hold myself accountable for my learning. Being a self directed learner helps me prepare for the future and succeed in life when times get hard and to be independent. This competency reflects me and how I handle challenges; I don't give up easily and I push myself to do better, always.
