Continuous study should occur to improve the function of the Board. Numerous handbooks and printed materials are available to guide school board members in the efficient discharge of their duties. Various school board associations including the National School Boards Association and the Delaware School Boards Association publish excellent materials which are also available to each board member.

Participation in school board association meetings affords an excellent opportunity for members to express themselves and to learn appreciably about school board operation by observing other directors in action.

Under the best of conditions, the relationship between the chief administrative officer and Board members is, necessarily, a closely-knit operation. Overlapping of functions and responsibilities must, necessarily, occur at times. Only in a spirit of confident teamwork and complete understanding are the Board members and the administrative officials free to operate.
