In the next seven or eight paragraphs I am going to attempt to predict life in the year 2026.

In transportation there will be ~~no~~ ^{still} cars but they will be highly modified (probably made to use solar energy) and for the rich there will be private aircrafts. The bicycle will be modified so that it can fly. Public transportation will be air shuttle. There will be interstellar space travel for vacations.

In education children will no longer be taught by teachers, they will be taught by computer. Each at his or her own speed. There will be no more grades, people will be categorized by the limitation of their brains (which will be figureable by then.)

The world will have run out of gas and oil but they will have harnessed the tornado by then (which is enough energy to heat homes in the U.S. for years), also solar energy will be used.

The government will probably be Communist except for a few holdouts such as Australia and probably the U.S. In other countries there will be little, if any freedom.

There will be freedom of religion to an extent but very limited.

Competitive sports will still be played but there will be new games and in the schools they are going to stress sports and science.

Housing will almost be the same. There will still be shums but a lot of housing will be on other planets.

Michigan City will no longer be here. If by some miraculous stunt it is not bombed then it will probably get smaller with most of the people running farms.

Should there be a WW III this essay in its entirety will become void. All facts belonging or pertaining to this essay will be immediately void.
