

The artist is a receptacle for emotions that come from all over the place: from the sky, from the earth, from a scrap of paper, from a passing shape. -Pablo Picasso

AP 2D Studio Art and Design Summer Assignments

1. Reading and Writing: Read Keeping Your Visual Journal and look over the Master Artist Exemplars on pages 3-8 of this packet.

Begin to make weekly or daily visual journaling entries. Entries can articulate information about your life, interests, imagination, etc. You can buy a sketchbook of your choice to use or pick one up from WHS before summer break begins.

Assessment: Sketchbook Check

2. 2-D Artwork: create an original 2-D work of art in your favorite medium and artistic voice. This “Summer Piece” will be the first artwork in your AP 2D portfolio.

Mediums can include any 2-D art-making materials. This can include but is not limited to charcoal, ink, colored pencil, acrylic paint, oil paint, watercolor, gouache, graphite, pastel, printmaking, digital drawing/painting, animation, and photography.

If you are working from a photograph that you did not take, you need to cite the source and significantly change it to make the image your own. This artwork should include elements of creativity and represent the kind of art you’re aesthetically and/or conceptually drawn to and compelled to create.

Assessment: Exhibit with Written Statement and Rubric

3. Written Statement: Write a short statement that explains the 2-D Artwork you created for assignment #2.
 - include information about your use of materials, processes, and ideas
 - typed 600 characters maximum/500 characters minimum

Assessment: Exhibit with Artwork and Rubric

Visual Journal Master Artist Exemplars

Frida Kahlo

Leonardo da Vinci

Paul Gauguin

Janice Lowrey

Mu Pan

Evan Kitson

Keeping Your Visual Journal

The use of personal journals full of writing and drawing has had powerful and far-reaching effects. Apart from improving writing skills, journals also work to change your enduring attitudes, values, and sense of personal identity. Ideas, feelings, and insights, kept in journals offer us not only a clue to the richness of our imagination but insight into our very being.

15 Reasons Why Artists Keep Visual Journals

- 1. Keeping a visual journal helps the artist develop a sense of self-discipline. By drawing in your journal every day you are developing the habit of creativity. The drawings can be ever so simple and as time goes by you will have developed a repertoire and a visual sourcebook. When the time comes to design a long-term drawing, a painting, or sculpture you will have a wealth of ideas available and you will have developed your skills so that drawing up your design is just a matter of applying what you have learned.
- 2. The chronological nature of the journal means that you are automatically recording your personal improvement. By recording trouble spots that need attention you are creating a path for yourself to follow. Because the internet is such a rich source of instruction and example you should put aside time to go online to find out what the solution to your artistic problems may be. Once you have collected a variety of examples and ideas use them to work out a personal solution by trying out all that you have seen. This process will nurture your artistic development and help you develop a sense of direction.
- 3. A journal can become for you a 'place' where you can work out what themes are developing on the journey. As issues, questions and ideas develop 'go with them' and let them give you direction. Themes are good because they give you a dialogue and point of interest. This can be a good starting point for discussions with other artists and fellow students.
- 4. It is always good when you are presenting your work to be able to fit it into a theme. Many exhibitions are grouped in this way. The working out of a theme also gives the artist a sense of completion when that thematic response has been followed to its logical conclusion.
- 5. Style is a process of evolution. When you begin keeping your journal you may not even know what your preferred style is. As you develop on a daily basis a personal style will emerge. Dialogue with that style. Ask yourself why you have gone in this direction? Does it make it easier? Can you see patterns and relationships? Do you know what is influencing you? Write your self-questioning down in your journal as you go. It will make interesting reading in years to come.
- 6. Once you have begun to develop the habit of creativity you will also have begun developing intuitive awareness. You will see things that stimulate curiosity and provoke fresh and new ideas. You will not be able to keep up with them. Jot them down. Keep your journal at hand at all times. Make sure you always keep it handy and small enough to fit into any bag or in the glove box of the car. Draw everything that catches the eye. Later you will be excited by all of the things you have gathered as source material that you would have forgotten about entirely if you had not recorded them in the minute. Collect ideas by jotting them down (scribble neatness doesn't count) and come back to them at a later date when that intuition or inspiration becomes relevant to the work at hand. If notes aren't taken at the time...the thoughts may be lost forever.

7. Regard your journal as your personal safe place. A collection of experimentations. No one should be looking over your shoulder ...it is your space for trying out techniques in a non-threatened way before committing to a more public form of artwork.

8. It is also a means of communication, a holding place for ideas to share with other artists and students who wish to learn. So keep it with you when mingling with other artists. If you are making preparations for submissions or to win contracts make sure you are keeping your notes in this way as it can facilitate discussion at a later date if this becomes necessary.

9. Your journal is your note-takers paradise ... as a place where ideas can be kept in the written form as well as visually... Keep the writing short and precise but do write down any ideas that come to your head as we often forget what stimulated our visual inspirations and the writing may be useful. Supplement your scribbles with poems, haikus, prose, and songs whatever is helping shape your thoughts and ideas at the time is relevant and may become useful.

10. Keep technical notes as well make sure you are learning about mixing colors, learning theory. Writing down and recording what you learn means that you have a ready reference. Again the internet is a great way to find our information...if you are having trouble understanding light sources for example enter that as a search term and you will be amazed at how much free information you can find. Be patient and don't just click on the first few sites you find. There is a wealth of information out there for the taking if you put in that little extra effort.

11. Set your self-learning tasks of specified natures with a particular learning outcome anticipated. For example, record atmospheres by going for a walk in the same place on a daily basis for a month but at different times of the day. Draw or paint in watercolor exactly what you see. Or go to a different place but at same times of the day. Don't just look for atmospheric or natural effects look to at the kinds of activity you can find. One example of this might new going to the same street corner at different times throughout the day – even the expressions on the faces of the people will change as they come and go. Try it, you may be amazed. Another way of creating a learning exercise is to look at and examine objects from all sides and views. Keep on setting yourself small learning tasks like this and you will be amazed at how much you improve and how your understanding of techniques increases.

12. Again your journal is a safe place where you can experiment with abstractions finding ways to express emotions and feelings. You can make your artistic journey a catalyst in your personal development by recording dreams, daydreams and locating meaning in them through exploration and analysis. Again the Internet is a great place for subscribing to discussion lists where people want to explore self-empowerment and personal development.

13. Above all this safe haven of personal expression can become for you if you let it be a source of relaxation. A ready-breathing space in a busy way of life. Learn to do relaxation and breathing exercises before and after you draw not only so that you tap into the more intuitive side of your brain but that so that the discipline of drawing and the artistic pathway becomes a source of great personal pleasure. Your journal should never be a chore but something you look forward to as a little breather in the busy pace of life.

14. Eventually your journal will naturally evolve into your precious planning tool. It will be a place where compositions are mapped out over a period of time before any major painting is begun. Projects will no longer be daunting, as you will have a never-ending fountain of reference ideas and information. Above all enjoy the journey and don't let it cause you even the slightest stress.

15. Journaling is best if it is done daily. It is also easiest to remember if it is the first thing you do when you wake up of a morning. Start the day by recording a drawing of your dreams. Or if you haven't dreamt throughout the night, simply draw the first thing that occurs to you when you wake up.

"Keeping Your Visual Journal". SBCC School of Media Arts, n.d. Web. 10 June 2014.
<http://victoriatorf.com/media_design/md_journal.html>.