Graduate Research Day 2024

Audio	Video
[Victoria Filloon] Well, Graduate Research Day is an event that we have every year that allows for students and postdoctoral fellows to come together	Young woman with a medium complexion wearing a yellow blouse and dark jacket is standing at a podium next to a large projection screen. She is lecturing to the audience in a large auditorium and actually be able to present the research that they've been working on for the past year. And it's also a really good opportunity	A fair woman with straight dark hair, wearing a brown, long sleeve blouse is standing at the podium next to the large screen speaking to the audience for interdepartmental communication. So really being able to see what other people are doing in other departments.	A woman with shoulder length, curly blonde hair pulled back from her face and round glasses is standing in an open atrium area with posters in rows behind her. Text: Victoria Filloon President, Graduate Student Council Microbiology and Immunology Student
Today We had a student speaker from each of our graduate school departments, and we had two post-doctoral speakers.	Montage of two different speakers at podium speaking to an interested audience
We had 46 posters today. We have ten from junior students. So junior graduate students. And we had 11 from the postdocs, and the rest was the senior students. Senior graduate students. And they all got to present their research today. [Dr. Kevil] As everybody knows, Graduate Research Day is a marquee day on our campus that is an opportunity for everyone that is doing research, learning about research to share your work and present it.	Montage of various students at different stages of education, standing at their posters, discussing their research with peers and faculty
Honestly, I really don't know a time when our graduate school has been as robust and active as it is today at this time.	Older gentleman with short reddish hair and gray beard and mustache, wearing a dark gray suit, stands at the podium in the auditorium Text: Christopher Kevil, P H D Vice Chancellor for Research Dean, School of Graduate Studies

Audio	Video
And that's a testament to each and every one of you. [Victoria Filloon] We also are having a post-graduation career talk	Various students presenting their posters in a large, sunny atrium area from Madison El-Saadi, Who's going to be talking about working in the bio equities. So that's about working on how Wall Street and science can come together. And it's very new career that we haven't heard from yet. And he's also an alum from the pharmacology, toxicology and neuroscience department.	Guest speaker standing at the podium in the auditorium with the large screen beside him. He continues to speak as the audience listens
It's really important that students at least have one type of opportunity to present their work. But it's also a good opportunity for students to be able to see what other students are, collaborate, get ideas from each other, and for professors even to be able to talk to students from other departments and really understand what's going on in the school as far as research goes. [Dr. Bodily] Students and postdocs are the ones that carry the research burden. You're the ones that are in the lab,	Montage of poster session as multiple students talk to faculty, other students, and judges about their research you know, moving fluids from one to do another and making the science happen. And we appreciate you. And when you see each other's work and you talk to each other and you are excited together,	Man with graying blonde hair and glasses, wearing a blue coat and pinstripe shirt stands at the podium in the auditorium Text: Jason Bodily, P H D Associate Dean, School of Graduate Studies Associate Professor of Microbiology and Immunology
it creates a sense of community and a sense of excitement that I think is very important.	Woman in atrium presenting her poster to a colleague
[Victoria Filloon] And yeah, it's just a nice little showcase and get together for all the students as well.	Victoria standing with the poster session going on behind her