The day I was Born

I am an Effective Communicator

One day, I had to present in front of a huge crowd for Black History Month and at first I was really Nervous and scared because I didn't know anyone except for my parents. I felt like backing out, but seeing my friends say their own speeches gave me confidence to speak to the crowd. I felt like backing out, but seeing my friends cheering me on, gave me confidence to speak. As I started, I felt more and more confident, helping me speak louder and more until I finished speaking.

The lesson I learned was, You should never give out when something looks hard or impossible. A little confidence can spark something in you and you can feel great and really proud.
