NIL DISCLOSURE RULES

for high school & junior college athletes

What's Changing

While OHSAA already requires student-athletes to report all NIL deals to them, an additional national disclosure rule now applies to any student-athlete who plans to play their sport at a Division I institution.

High school and junior college athletes now need to disclose all NIL deals worth $600 or more.

Who This Affects

High school and junior college athletes who plan to play their sport in college at a Division I school.

The College Sports Commission mandates NIL payments must have a "valid business purpose" meaning pay-for-play deals are not allowed.

What to Report

Any deal worth $600 or more must be reported.

This includes deals in which no money is exchanged but free or discounted products or services were received by an athlete.

Contract information is required - name of business, term, compensation, etc.

How to Report

Reporting must be done via the new clearinghouse - NIL Go - at https://nilgo.com

When to Report

Deals executed, agreed upon, or include payments after July 1, 2025, or the athlete's first day of junior year - whichever is later.
