

FARE WELL,

Goodbye from Yearbook!

Well, everyone, we did it. School is officially over, summer is finally here, and most importantly, this is the last blog post I have to write.

If you've read any of my blogs this year(which isn't many), you probably know that writing is not exactly my favorite activity. In fact, the only reason you're reading this right now is that Ms. Wilson keeps insisting that I have to write these. So, Ms. Wilson, if you're reading this: congratulations, you got one more out of me.

As exciting as the yearbook has been, I think I speak for everyone when I say we are more than ready for summer. No more homework, no more tests, no more waking up way too early in the morning. It's time to sleep until noon, forget what day of the week it is, and pretend school doesn't exist for a few months. The Yearbook staff has loved sharing stories, taking photos, covering events, and creating this year's yearbook and Mining Report. We hope you've enjoyed reading everything as much as we've enjoyed putting it together (well... most of us probably enjoyed the writing part more than I did).

Thank you for being such a great audience this year. We hope you love the yearbook, enjoy looking back on all the memories, and keep supporting student activities.

Now, if you'll excuse me, I'm going to spend my summer doing literally anything that doesn't involve writing a blog post.

Have an amazing summer, Prospecters!
