Open School Gets Netted

Jeffrey Shields: Staff Reporter

The Saint Paul Open School is now on the Internet. As of September, Open School is hooked up to the World Wide Web (WWW), a computer service which allows users to access an endless amount of information. Over the last two school years, the district has worked to pass a referendum that would give all Saint Paul Public Schools Internet access. As of the beginning of this school year, there were only five or six schools that were not yet set up.

An internet hookup means increased computer opportunities for the students and staff at Open. Bill Glaser, Open's new computer teacher, said the school may soon have its own home page. "In the next few months, I'm hoping to set up a page for the school. We would put in stuff like the Open School philosophy, pictures of students, a school newspaper, things like that," he said. He also said that a few students who want to will have the option to set up a web page of their own.

Right now, the computer lab's Internet access is mainly used by the SLC, a few classes and some miscellaneous students, but Glaser said that he would like to see the ELC getting involved too. As of now, he works with a few ELC classes teaching them to use the computers. They work on simple skills, such as moving the mouse and painting.

Science teacher Julie Doble is excited about the arrival of the Internet. "I think it's about time," she said. She has used the Internet already to find information about deformed frogs in Minnesota for her biology class, and she plans to use it for research papers in her Ethics class. She hopes e-mail will soon be available for students and staff as well.

The program installed at Open is called Netscape, a very widely used program for accessing the Internet. The connection is different from the one used in most homes. Most people who access the Internet from their home use a computer device called a modem and a telephone line. They use their computer and modem to call their ISP via the telephone line.

Open School's connection works differently. The grant from the district paid for all schools to get a direct cable connection. It is a steady, always-on line that works via cable, like cable television cable. It runs from the building to the district and then to the ISP, which is called MinnNet. This link allows us to have about twenty computers all on the Internet at the same time, with only one line coming out of the Internet

Notes from the Principal

Tonya Jaworski: Staff Reporter

Open School Principal Ruth Pechmann was very positive about the new school year in an interview with The Purple Press. "It was a nice start, lots of new students, but so far so good."

Some of Ruth's goal's for the new school year are to upgrade the computer lab, finish the playground by installing the dome climber, and she hopes the 25th Anniversary goes well. Some of the summer improvements included new monitors, new sinks in all elementary classes, and the new teacher's lounge.

Asked about upcoming events and plans, Ruth mentioned the new softball field that is under construction, the upcoming auction and, hopefully, more all-school assemblies.

Long Advisory

Anna Karl: Staff Reporter

Long Advisory is coming up, and it looks like it's going to be fun. Here's what some advisories are doing: Julie's and Dara's advisories are going rock climbing at Vertical Endeavors. This will be the third year in a row Julie's advisory has done this. "It's fun because they learn to depend on each other," said Juile.

Leo's and Chris's advisories will team up to go bowling at the Saint Paul Campus Center. "We seriously considered mountain climbing, but there were already two groups going this time around," said Leo. "We're looking into it for the long advisory before Christmas."

Connie's and Lenni's advisories are taking a boat trip on the Mississippi River and through the Lock and Dam.

SLC Student Election

Xe Moua: Staff Reporter

SLC students and staff members piled into the cafeteria this fall to watch Open School's 96' election. This year, two candidates, Leesha Un and Heather Harper, ran for Student Body President. After everyone quieted down, Harper gave the first speech.

She started off by talking about AIDS, and how she can help prevent it. She also talked about how SLC and ELC should get together more often. "It is important to bring all of us together," she said.

"I came today as an equal," said Un at the beginning of her speech. Her speech was about how Open School is like a family to her. "I'll be more than happy to take the role as president," Un said at the end of her speech. The audience applauded for both candidates.

Harper was announced as the winner the following day.

"I think (the election) was a success," Harper said during an interview. "I was excited, but not over-excited."

Lenni Augustine, the Student Government advisor agreed, "I think this year's election was a success," she said. "Heather will be a good president. Both the candidates would be."

Note from The Purple Press staff advisor

Welcome to the inaugural issue of Open School's new student publication. We hope our readers enjoy the first issue and we welcome feedback. This issue represents a lot of hard work from a variety of students. Special thanks goes out to Jeff Shields, who put countless hours into producing the final product. I would also like to thank John Lubke, for editing help, the building, instead of one line for each computer. This also makes a modem unnecessary with any of the computers, and our connection will go over three times faster than the connection coming out of a home.

In order to access the Internet, you enter an address for the computer that you want to contact, and this connects you to that computer's "home page". This home page is set up to give you information and addresses, or "links," to other home pages of the same topic. To have a home page, you basically need a connection to the Internet (all the other home pages), and a computer that can sit waiting for people to access it. The Internet is really not much more than telephone/cable TV/fiber optic cables going from one computer to the next and to all the other computers.

"In the next few months, I'm hoping to set up [an Internet] page for the school."

From one computer you can access any of the information available on any of the others. When you start Netscape from one of the computers at school, it's set up to automatically go to the address, <http://www.yahoo.com>. This is a home page where you can do a search for anything on the Internet. Since the Internet is something that exists all over the world, if you were to search for "horses", and you typed in "horses", you would probably get about 15,000 different sites on that topic. But Yahoo is set up so that after each search it will prompt you for a narrower search, then you can type in a certain type of horse and the list of sites will get smaller. You can search again until it gets so small that you might be able to scroll through the list and find the specific sites that you were looking for. In any case, the Internet is so huge you can probably find 20 or so home pages on any topic, making research very easy. Users have access to whole corporations, movies, books, museums, and just about everything else.

25th Anniversary Reunion

Ka Moua: Staff Reporter

The people of Saint Paul Open School will be celebrating the 25th reunion on October 12, 1996 at the new building on Western Avenue.

Open has moved four times. The original school was located on University by Porky's restaurant, then it moved near the Capitol, then Linwood before the current home was found.

The reunion will have a room for each graduating class, and food will be served in the auditorium. Everyone will be there, families, friends, staff, and lots of smiles.

"A lot of people have been calling and talking about showing up. I expect a big crowd. It's exciting," said Lenni Augustine, who has been with Open School since the beginning.

"At the last reunion there was at least 500 people that showed up, it's kind of exciting, it's been a long time, maybe I won't remember some of them," said Ev Meyers, another long-time Open School staff member.

While the school has changed over the years, according to Augustine, its key principals remain intact.

"I have been involved since this school started, I helped with the community that started this school," Lenni said. "I volunteered the first year, then I was hired on the second year. We are more organized than before, we used to put new schedules on the bulletin board everyday, eventually we started to plan ahead.

Open school has never been boring, ever, ever, ever. There have been a couple of times when it was scary because of the cuts and fund raising, but we always get enough support."

Athletes at Open

"I figured going to a smaller school. . . would help me focus better on my studies."

Tattoos and Piercings

"My brother has a friend that does it in his basement."

Trip to Mexico a success!

Mayan ruins one of the highlights.

A closer look at our Student Government president

Erin Hoffman: Staff Reporter

While interviewing our new Student Government President, Heather Harper, a few main intentions of her's became very apparent. AIDS education and narrowing the gap between ELC students, SLC students, and the Open School Staff.

Knowing that it will be difficult to accomplish these, she still remains optimistic about it all. Heather plans to get students opinions and try and work with people to make the ideas happen. She will also bring up the students' main ideas at the All-City and All-State Student Government Conferences. "I want the students to know that I really do care about their concerns and that they should come and talk to me about it and I'll do everything in my power to help change it."

Heather's main concern about Open School students is that not everyone is as educated about AIDS as they need to be. "So many people are dying of this deadly disease who may not have been properly educated about it. I want to come to Open School's 50th anniversary and see everyone's face that I see in school today."

To help educate the students at our school, Heather is going to try and have speakers come and talk with the students and answer their questions. The speakers will talk to the students about how you can and can't get AIDS, what the statistics are, and, most importantly, how to prevent this deadly tragedy from happening.

In addition to AIDS education, there are a few things about Open School that Heather would like to change. For instance, Heather is very interested in working with both the students and the staff to get an open campus lunch program that both parties are happy with. She would also like to have Probable Cause more clearly defined. She feels strongly that the students should know exactly what their rights are and she plans on educating them about it.

"There is no excuse for any discrimination whatsoever. The discrimination needs to STOP!!"

Finally, Heather feels there should be stronger punishments for racist, sexist, or homophobic remarks in school. "There is no excuse for any discrimination whatsoever. The discrimination needs to STOP!!"

"I want to come to Open School's 50th anniversary and see everyone's face that I see in school today."

Open School's open opinions

Teol Knight: Staff Reporter

In every school there are some pros and cons, and every person has their own personal opinion on what those might be. The Purple Press interviewed a variety of students to get their opinions about Open School.

The first question The Purple Press asked was "What do students like about being at Open School?"

-Liv Rodriguez, a sophomore in her first year at Open School, said, "The teachers are pretty neat, some of them. Plus I think the validations are neat."

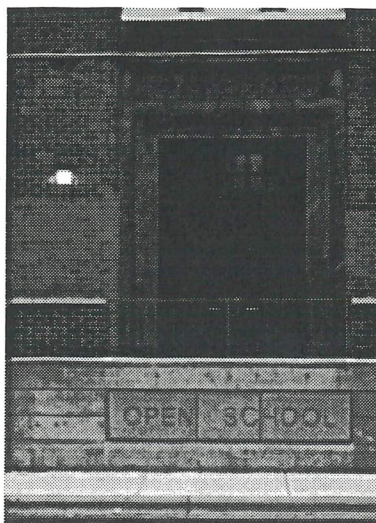

-Erin Hoffman, a junior going on her third year, said, "I like how different types of people get along and I like the validation system."

-Tanya Milton, a junior/senior going on her second year at Open, said, "There isn't much to do, you're not secluded and teachers can give you more attention because there is not that many students to deal with."

-Aisha Formanski, a junior who is one of Open's oldest students, still at Open, going on her 12th year, said, "There are lots of things I like, but most, I like having classes with all ages."

Next, students were asked the opposite of the first question: "What don't you like about Open School?"

-Liv Rodriguez, "Some of the teachers don't listen well to their students. I really miss my old friends and my old school. We had an open lunch and all that, it was really nice."

-Erin Hoffman, "I don't like the homophobic and sexual comments that I hear in the halls."

-Tanya Milton, "Everybody is glued to themselves, they all have their own little best friend."

-Aisha Formanski, "The low standards some people have for themselves."

From these two basic questions it seems as though Open School's educational system is one of the highlights to being at open. Everywhere you go, there always seems to be something you would change. Even at Open School, some students wouldn't mind making a few changes of their own. When asked what those changes might be, the students had a variety of answers, like...

-Kris Blanco, who is a sophomore attending her first year at Open, said if she could change anything at Open it would be the art department, "I would make it bigger."

-Xe Moua, a freshman at open who has been attending for two years, said, "I'd make the bathroom stalls bigger."

-Erin Hoffman said, "We'd have open campus."

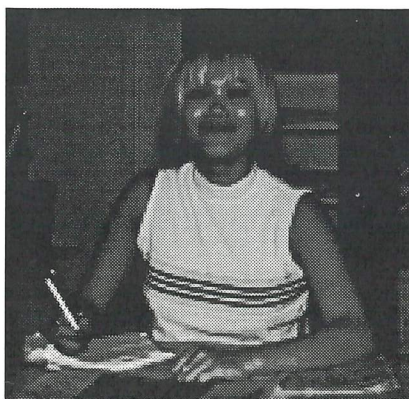

-Aisha Formonski said "I would make ELC'ers and SLC'ers do more activities together."

-Tanya Milton said "We'd have sports teams, that way the population of our school could get bigger."

-Liv Rodriguez said "A bigger school and more students. I think it's nicer to have a large variety of people." As you can see, everyone has their own "open" opinion.

Overall, when the students that were interviewed were asked about how they liked the education system, their answers were very similar. They agreed that it was a good way of teaching, they liked the creative ideas and the validation system. Some students thought that some teachers taught too traditionally and too fast.

Tattoos and piercings, decoration or waste of time?

Kris Blanco: Staff Reporter

As you walk down the hallways at Open School, you probably notice more students with facial piercings and tattoos. You have to wonder why they do it and what their parents think about it. Here is what staff and students think about this ongoing style.

What do you think of tattoos and piercings?

"I think that tattoos and piercings are okay for people who want them. They're the ones who have to live with it everyday."

Teol Knight - 11th grade

"I think they express who you are and they're very decorative."

Pro Huff - 11th

"I think they're sick, ugly and disgusting!"

Sally Cherveney 10th

"To each their own. People make their own choices. Tattoos, you can't go back on. If I could control it I would, but I can't."

Greg Adams - Teacher

"I think they look good on peoples' skin"

Lex Painter - 11th

"They make me feel weird. How do people blow their nose with rings on them? I don't mind them as long as you don't get into them too much."

Lenni Augustine - Teacher

Would you ever get a tattoo or pierce your face?

"No it's not me. I'm not against it, but it's not my style."

Leo Bickelhaupt - Teacher

"Aren't they poisonous to the body or something like that?"

Too painful not me."

Kenya Washington - 12th

"I got my ears pierced."

Derrick Woodson - 9th

"Yes. Maybe a small tattoo or a nose ring. I'm thinking of an eyebrow ring."

Teol Knight 11th

What would your parents think about it?

"My dad would freak out but my mom said that I could get my belly button pierced."

Allison Dagen - 10th

"My tattoo is over a scar, so my mom understood. She likes the piercings but my dad hates it all."

Lex Painter - 11th

"My dad didn't mind an earring, but a tattoo is too much."

Noah Miwa

"Don't know, I don't think they would mind"

Pro Huff - 11th

Where do you get a tattoo or piercing?

"Sergio, my sisters friend."

Arthur Vallente - 9th

"Not from someone stupid, a place that is certified by the state."

Greg Adams - Teacher

"My brother has a friend who does it in his basement."

Allison Dagen - 10th

"I got my tattoo at my sister's husband's friend's house. My friends pierced my ears and my nose, or Ace Tattoos."

Lex Painter - 11th

"Uptown, dude"

Leo Bickelhaupt - Teacher

Why would you do it?

"I think people do it because they think it enhances their looks."

Lenni Augustine - Teacher

"I'd get it because it is very pretty."

Marlene Otterness 10th

"Because it makes you feel like you're special and it expresses the mood that I have. Tattoos are great. They make me feel so young and it's a non-sexist type of art."

Liv Rodriguez - 10th

"To express your own individuality."

Bill Glaser - Teacher

Fall Camping Trip

Chris Alexander: Staff Reporter

It's worth the 45-minute wait on a bus loaded with gear and people to go on Open School's annual fall camping trip at Lake Elmo.

Chris Wintheiser, three chaperones and approximately 30 students braved this year's trip, despite rain and low temperatures. Those students who weren't afraid of the rain had the opportunity to enjoy fishing at the pier about three miles from camp. At night, students had the choice of sleeping or taking part in the stay-up-late contest.

New Student is on Track and Cross Country at Central

Tanya Milton: Staff Reporter

Teol Knight, a former student at Saint Paul Central High School, made the switch to Open School for academic reasons. In the afternoons, however, Knight returns to Central where she still runs Varsity Cross Country and Track.

Knight, 16, has been playing sports for about four years. She started playing sports at Memorial Middle School in New Mexico. She ran track, cross country, and played basketball for her school at Memorial. When Teol was in the 8th grade, she made the varsity Cross Country and track teams at Robinson High School. She continued to play basketball and football for her junior high. In 8th grade Teol went to the New Mexico State Meet for cross country.

In 9th grade her family moved to Minnesota, where she made the varsity cross country and track teams at Central. She also went to State in cross country that year. In addition to running, Teol played on the ninth grade basketball team in the winter.

During the summer of 1996, before Teol's junior year, she made a switch to Open School.

"I wasn't getting my school work done because I was too distracted by all the students at Central. I figure going to a smaller school with fewer students would help me focus better on my studies."

She attends classes at Open in the morning and is part of the acting department at Central in the afternoon.

Open School, in past years, has lost great athletes like Teol to other schools. The Purple Press asked her what she thought of Open School not having any sports teams.

"I would like to get some sports teams started at Open School."

Although Teol considers academics more important than athletics, she considers sports a crucial part of her education.

"I would transfer if I couldn't play sports for other schools, because sports are a daily motivator, and it helps keep me in shape. Sports always keep me out of trouble... I'm not saying I was in any trouble, but I probably wouldn't be as successful as I am without sports and my academic skills."

South of the Border

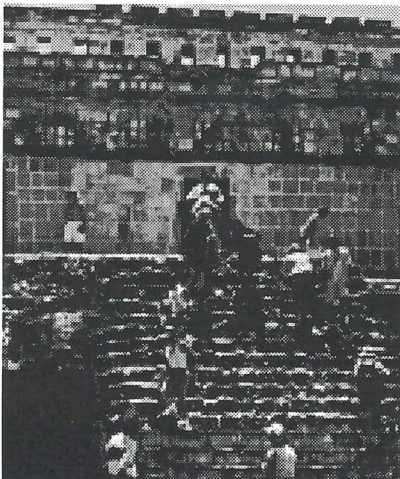

Johnathon Lubke: Staff Reporter

Last summer, Jennifer Greer took a group of 12 SLC students (and an uncle) to Mexico. The trip left from Minneapolis at 7:15 AM on August 9. The destination was the cities of Merida and Isla Mujeres.

The 8-day trip was funded by student projects. These projects included candy bar and sucker sales, as well as a walkathon.

In Merida, they were able to see such monuments as the Mayan pyramids and other Native American landmarks. However, Greer says "The favorite part of the trip overall was in Isla Mujeres, where students had an opportunity to snorkel, swim, and ride go-carts and mopeds."

Another highlight for

Greer, was seeing her students speak with the locals. "Finally, students had the opportunity to use their Spanish on a daily basis, from ordering breakfast to bartering in the marketplace."

The following students attended the Mexico trip: Sai Thao, Mai Xiong, Ian Lakin, Mike Pettey, Graciella Eckert, Donovan Eckert, Andrew Netteburg, Kelly Nelson, Liz Skramstad, Noah Comer, Heather Benjamin, Angie Lund, and Rachel Wilgrund.

Political Asylum: Cultural Ignorance Should Not Be Tolerated

Lex Painter: Staff Reporter

I read an article in the New York Times called "Roots of Exile." The story is about a woman named Fauziya Kassindja from Kpalime, a small country in west Africa. Miss Kassindja had come to America for political asylum. Kassindja came because, in her culture, genital mutilation was performed before marriage.

She escaped from her husband in Africa with the help of her mother. She flew to Germany, where she stayed for two months, then decided she wanted to go to America. When she arrived in America, she confessed to the immigration officers that her documents were false and asked for asylum.

She was then handcuffed and taken to Esmor Detention Center in Elizabeth N.J., which was soon to become known for the cruelty of its guards. On August 25, 1995 she was sent to see an immigration judge in Philadelphia by the name of Donald V. Ferlise.

Ferlise found her story to be "lacking rationality and internal consistency" and thus sentenced her to one year in prison for lying to the courts.

After 16 months in jail, Ms. Miller Bashir, Kassindja's Lawyer, sought help from the Advocates for Refugees and Surita Sandosham of Equality Now, a New York-based woman's rights group. They agreed to help her get access to media and political contacts that would bring attention to the case. After all the media attention and signed petitions, her appeal came through. Felise then granted Kassindja her original request for political asylum.

In my opinion, the original outcome of this case is completely appalling!! I feel that it should be the job of every judge to research each and every case that comes before them. If they can't handle doing this, they need to find a new line of work where they can be lazy and it won't seriously affect the lives of others!!

I am currently in 11th grade and have known about this specific cultural practice for many years. I first learned about it in a non-fiction novel called The Princess, which was recommended by my mother. The book was about a woman from Iran who was also trying to escape genital mutilation.

Kassindja's case made me extremely upset and embarrassed about my country. It also doesn't speak well for the state of our judicial system!

It is shocking to me that a judge would assume this woman was lying just because he lacks cultural awareness and is not fit for his job. I think that anyone who has a say regarding which immigrants can come to America from other countries should be well informed about cultural practices in other countries.

Open Story:

Welcome to Open Story. (That's redundant.) This is the section of the newspaper where audience participation takes on a new form. It's democratic fiction.

Every edition will contain a short piece of a continuing story, as well as four possible endings. The readership will vote on the best ending. Why vote? Because if you don't, I will.

Give me your votes during SLC lunch in the cafeteria. (If you run into me elsewhere, I will accept it.) The continuation will be in the next issue. Submit your votes by Friday, October 24. Since this is democratic, I'll let you vote on the premise of the story:

- A - The witty, romantic exploits of six Washington D.C. subway passengers. (Very NBCish.)
- B - A sci-fi space adventure, taking place . . . somewhere.
- C - A drama about the staff of a newspaper. (Hint, hint.)
- D - An off-the-wall, zany, anything goes story that let's the imagination go where it wants to.

Odyssey of the Migraine

Why is it that memories are so deceptive? Why is it that when I reflect back on a time in my life, I can only remember the happy times, the good times; not the times when I was so anxious I almost licked out an empty valium container. I am, of course, speaking of last year's Odyssey of the Mind tournament, an event that took almost six months of preparation and 100% of my creative energy. However, I found myself sitting in an O.M. meeting Thursday, which I choose to blame on an early onset of Alzheimers.

Last year's Odyssey of the Mind competition remains a blur of nausea, and an intense desire to faint, which never happens when you want it to. I saw a side of Open School at those long O.M. competitions that I'd never seen before, not a very pretty side. I've made a point to never boo anyone in my life, I consider it, oh I don't know, bad sportsmanship. I learned that if there is such a thing as karma, we brought our loss to Sibley High school upon ourselves.

Which is not to say that we didn't do an absolutely fabulous job, because we did. Especially the script, which I wrote. The fact that I spent so much of my time with the same group of people, without killing or maiming anyone, still amazes me. Our group of seven actually became quite bonded. We went shopping with each other, slept at each others houses, and all together probably consumed more junk food than a member of Over Eaters Anonymous has in an entire life time.

Shannon Scott
Staff Columnist

Towards the end, we became more and more irritated with one another. I found myself ditching classes just so I could sneak in, grab the disk and "fix" the script. This is something I'm not particularly proud of, something my therapist would call a "control issue." On competition day itself, we united again in an effort to keep myself and the set from falling apart. I have intense fear of the stage and the fact that my parents, my aunts, and my then boyfriend were sitting in the audience watching me, escalated my fears to that of a victim in a slasher movie.

After our performance was over, I felt such a gigantic relief that I walked around the rest of the day in a daze, making family and friends wonder if I had been sniffing paint fumes. At 5:00, all the teams were called into an auditorium for the results.

Following a ceremony, which I slept through, it was finally time to hand out the awards. While I secretly prayed for a second place ribbon, so I would never have to do this again, I heard my school screaming and booing at our opponents. When our team was announced as second place winner, I found it hard to conceal my joy as I skipped down the aisle to snatch up my ribbon. When I returned to my seat I found many of my team mates sobbing. I have to admit I was hoping for a cash prize too.

Now I'm faced with the decision of putting myself through this again. Long hours of exhausting work, late nights, team work, team writing, constant anxiety, draining of creative juices, and a possible cavity. Have I learned my lesson? Probably not.

Back to School '96

Jeanie Madrigal: Staff Critic

On September 24, 1996 I went to the Target Center for the Back to School concert. It was pretty cool. Last year's concert was better. If Nas would have showed up it would have been a lot cooler.

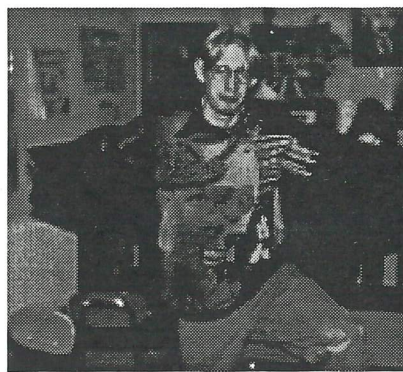

I thought Bone Thugs was the best group there. SWV showed up, but they were really bad. They don't sound good at all in concert. They weren't on stage very long. The crowd wasn't all that happy when they were singing.

Keith Sweat was also there. He was alright. He whines when he sings. The crowd was going crazy when he was on stage. It really wasn't all that great. I really didn't go to see him.

When Nas didn't show, a lot of people there were upset. It was pretty funny because some old man was there at the end of the concert yelling. "I came here to see Nas." It was an alright concert, I guess, even if Nas didn't show up.

Bone Thugs-n-Harmony was really good. They sounded great in concert. When they sang "Crossroads" everybody was waving their lighters in the air and singing. Everyone inside was cool, but after the concert there were reports of shootings.

The critics welcome suggestions on what needs to be reviewed. If you have a suggestion, talk to Leo in room 311.

AEROSMITH

Get Your Wings

1974, Columbia CK 57361

Get Your Wings, Aerosmith's sophomore release, is unquestionably where the Aerosmith dynasty of the 70s began. Although Aerosmith, the group's 1973 offering, was a solid effort, they had yet to showcase their full talents. On Wings they do that and then some.

On "Seasons of Wither," Steven Tyler brings his guitar with him and regular guitarist Joe Perry breaks out the six-string bass to collaborate for a wonderfully written ballad. "Train Kept A-Rollin'" is a raw rendition of the Yardbirds classic, complimented by Perry's original riffs. And "Same Old Song and Dance" is the simple kind of song that defines rock n' roll.

All in all, despite some low points, this CD represents music's greatest form, and it will someday earn its place in rock history.

TOM PETTY & THE HEARTBREAKERS

Music from the Motion Picture "She's The One"

1996, Warner Bros. 2-90317 9

The Heartbreakers' first studio album since 1991's Into The Great Wide Open, this soundtrack serves as a get-together album for the group. Reminiscent of their 1985 LP, Southern Accents, this album was put together with hastily written tracks and a couple of covers, but still makes the grade, as the Heartbreakers have done for so many years.

The burden of "She's The One" is carried by the smash single "Walls," of which there are two versions on the album, and "Angel," an acoustic gem written by Petty himself. The only thing dragging this down is the cover of Beck's "Ahole," which doesn't fit with the Heartbreakers' persona.

Should you buy it? This isn't the Heartbreakers' best work, but they've done worse. Besides, a debut on a new label is a must-have.
