Some destination, A footstep
In the sand. Some indication,
A truth to understand. I'm Going hunting, To find it
If I can. But it might
Be just an arrow, To
Still some other plan.

I want to make violent love to you & want to have dates every night of the week and kissing in the pale moonlight - beep-beep-beep! & want to make violent love to you! Now I don't want to make you frantic and I don't want to cramp your style, but I'm in a panic. You're driving me wild! I want to make boop-de-doop-de-doop. Have a little boy looks just like you - p-de-doop. I want to make violent love to you! Boop-beep-de-doop! (camp song)

That was a memorable day to me, for it made great changes in me. But it is the same with any life. Imagine one selected day struck out of it, and think how different its course would have been. Pause you who read this, and think for a moment of the long chain of iron or gold, of thorns or flowers, that would never have bound you, but for the formation of the first link on one memorable day.

Catch the rooks sleeping, and break no twig,

Thrust out our heads above the branches

Out of the chaos would come bliss.

Like the threads that go to make the pattern in a carpet, we are all mixed up with one another. Black men, red men, white men, yellow men. One pulls a string, and cannot say what the reaction will be. And never can we get any idea ourselves of what the pattern we are making is in the end to be. That is for those who come after us and shall see the result of our labor spread behind them over the years.

I like to think that through my pattern there runs a golden thread that is your kindness to me, and your understanding, and our friendship, and all that it has meant.

And so man made his way.
Experience, the tireless search of eager mind,

Pictures and songs and statues finely wrought.
He's learned them stage by stage and bit by bit.

Until man's art assailed perfection's peak.

WE WILL REMEMBER ERIK

The paths of friends part in many ways. Through passage of time, through separation of distance, through death. But the paths of those bonded by love never more than temporarily diverge. Although traveling different roads, one is constantly afforded glimpses of another. One is eternally aware of the presence of the other as crossroads are neared.

As our paths have not more than for a time diverged, we are, and will forever remain, incapable of forgetting Erik Flom. His omnipresent smile and good will were far more than contagious. His effusive optimism, in all its sincerity, emanated from his being, permeating everyone with whom he came in contact. His unbelievably courageous realism never produced cynicism or self-pity, nor was his inextinguishable hope ever dampened.

Erik's three year struggle with Leukemia did not result in the seemingly inevitable disillusion with diagnoses, prognoses, extensive testing, hospitalization, but rather produced an intellectual fascination with medical processes. He always assured well wishers that he was all right, never failing to inquire into how his visitors themselves were doing. Erik never hesitated. Not in the 'freshness of the morning', nor in the 'weariness of midday', nor even in the exhaustion of the evening.

In a sense, a part of each one who knew him died with him. But in the same sense, Erik now lives, and will forever live, in our hearts, in the memories of all. We shall always be aware of his presence. He is just ahead at the next crossroad. Not hesitating. Smiling.
