Dear AISA family,

Students are encouraged to borrow books as often as possible from the AISA Library. Please help your child to understand the tremendous trust placed in them to take care of our shared books and return them to the library. Students should practice keeping their library books in the same place (e.g.: a bedside table) so that they do not get lost. Thank you very much, and happy reading!

When I use the AISA Library, I agree that

- My books are due every week and may be renewed for up to two weeks.
- I will keep books away from pets, babies, water bottles, and food.
- I will keep my library books clean, dry, and neat.
- I will not dog ear pages, but will use bookmarks to keep my place in a book.
- I will pay for any lost or damaged books so that the library may buy them, again.
- (Parent): If my child borrows books that I do not approve of, I will talk to them about what they should be reading.

Have fun reading!

Singing

Singing slows down language. It helps children hear the smaller sounds in words. There is also a different note for each syllable so they hear words broken down in to parts, supporting phonological awareness. This helps children later sound out words. Some songs have interesting words that we would not hear in normal conversation with young children, so they are also building vocabulary.

As you sing with children, you have the opportunity to support their pre-reading skills in little ways that add up to make a difference by the time children enter school. Using the five practices (Talking, Singing, Reading, Writing and Playing) to support the early literacy skills in enjoyable ways is the best way to help children enter school ready to learn to read.

Talking

Children start to learn language by hearing people talk. This is oral language! When you talk with your baby, your baby is hearing the sounds of the languages you speak, learning what words mean as you point to and label things. Babies will start to babble and their babble uses the sounds they have heard. As children get older they follow directions, repeat your words, respond to what you say with words, phrases, and then whole sentences. Listening to children while they speak is as important as talking to them. Young children need more time than adults do to figure out what to say and how to say it. Having your children talk, tell and retell stories, and tell you what they know all helps them to later understand what they read.

When you add new words and information to conversations with your children, you are developing their vocabulary and background knowledge. When you talk with them about signs and logos, you are developing their print awareness. When you talk with them about shapes and observe what is alike and different, or point out letters, you are developing their letter knowledge.

As you talk with children, you have the opportunity to support their pre-reading skills in little ways that add up to make a difference by the time children enter school. Using the five practices (Talking, Singing, Reading, Writing and Playing) to support the early literacy skills in enjoyable ways is the best way to help children enter school ready to learn to read.

Playing

Play, in addition to being fun, helps children to think symbolically. One item represents another—a block might represent a telephone. This kind of symbolic thinking is the same kind of thinking that is used for reading. Pictures and letters represent real things. Dramatic play, when children act out stories, helps them build background knowledge—how stories work. As you play with children, you have the opportunity to support their pre-reading skills in little ways that add up to make a difference by the time children enter school. Using the five practices (Talking, Singing, Reading, Writing and Playing) to support the early literacy skills in enjoyable ways is the best way to help children enter school ready to learn to read.

Several libraries in Virginia have Early Literacy Activity Centers or places for children to develop early literacy skills through play.

Reading

Shared reading is the single most important activity that you can do to help children get ready to read, even from birth! Remember to keep the interaction around the book a positive one. When children have positive experiences around books and reading they are more likely to stick with learning to read when they get to school, even if it is difficult.

Books have different words than the words of conversation so children learn more words when you read books to them. Some board books for babies actually do not have many words, so you would add some to those on the page. In this way you are developing your children's vocabulary.

Reading books helps develop children's background knowledge. When you read story books, they learn the structure of story so that when they are asked to write a story in school they know what to do. When you read factual books with young children you respond to their curiosity and help them learn about the world.

When pointing to the words in the title or a repeated phrase you support print awareness. You can point out letters in any book or share alphabet books to support letter knowledge. Many books for young children include the sounds of animals and have rhymes, both of which support phonological awareness.

As you read with children, you have the opportunity to support their pre-reading skills in little ways that add up to make a difference by the time children enter school. Visit your public library for books your librarian is knowledgeable and delighted to help. Using the five practices (Talking, Singing, Reading, Writing and Playing) to support the early literacy skills in enjoyable ways is the best way to help children enter school ready to learn to read.

You might also share the book from Tumblebooks library or the book of the day on DaybyDayva.org.

Writing

Reading and writing go together. Both are ways to represent the spoken word. Writing goes through stages from light markings to letter like forms to drawing letters to forming them. Writing helps children understand that print has meaning. When children scribble and then say what it means, they are understanding that what they have written or drawn means something. The beginning of writing for very young children is learning how to use their hands and fingers so that later they will hold crayons and pencils.

As you write with children, you have the opportunity to support their pre-reading skills in little ways that add up to make a difference by the time children enter school. Using the five practices (Talking, Singing, Reading, Writing and Playing) to support the early literacy skills in enjoyable ways is the best way to help children enter school ready to learn to read.

Changed your mind about a book you took from the shelf? Put it in a basket or leave it on a table. Please, do not reshelve it!

Returning Materials

*Aug-Sept: ECES students may borrow up to 2 books at a time to ensure that they can keep track of them. Oct.-May: We will follow the usual borrowing policy.**

ECES: Books are due every week

MSHS/Adults: Books are due every two weeks
*All students may renew books twice

Lost books must be paid for at the Business Office
We do not charge overdue fines

Lost/Damaged Books

Tips for caring for library books

- Please return your library books directly to the library, not to the classroom. You are responsible for every library book that you borrow, until then.
- Keep your books away from water, other liquids, and food. Return books in the same condition in which they were lent to you. You may have to pay a replacement fee, otherwise.
- Practice caring and being responsible for your books by keeping them in the classroom (seat pocket, book box, etc.) OR designate an area of your home for the safekeeping of library books (bedside table).
- Student library accounts with books that are 4 weeks or more overdue will be referred to the Business Office for follow up. You may continue to borrow books during that time.
