At John Burroughs High School, we work every day to build a school community where students feel accepted for who they are and where kindness, respect, and positive relationships guide how we treat one another. The biggest obstacle to creating this culture continues to be the words and names some students use with each other. Derogatory language, including hate speech based on a student's race, ethnicity, religion, sexual orientation, gender identity, or any other part of their identity, harms our students and undermines the environment we are trying to create. Words like the N-word, the F-slur, or the R-word are deeply hurtful and have no place in our school community. These terms must be removed from our students' vocabulary entirely. With this in mind, I am asking that you speak with your child again tonight about the power of their words and the responsibility they have to never use language that is hateful, discriminatory, or profane. Please make it clear that as their parent, you expect them to treat others with respect and to use only words that are kind. Thank you for partnering with us to ensure JBHS remains a place where every student feels valued, respected, and safe.
