A Note From The School Counselor

Disasters, such as flooding and tornados, can have a strong emotional effect even for people not directly affected by the disasters. The scope of devastation and loss of life can be very disturbing and hard to comprehend. Common reactions include sadness, concern for loved ones in affected areas, anxiety over a large-scale disaster occurring at home, and the strong desire to help.

Adults can help by supporting your child's emotional and psychological needs. Have factual conversations about the events. Let your child guide you in how much they want to know. Do something positive to help others. Focus on people's resiliency. Limit the amount of media exposure that children are viewing about the disaster.

Potential reactions in adolescents may include sleeping and eating disturbances, agitation, increase in conflicts, physical complaints, delinquent behavior, and poor concentration.

Adults should contact a professional if children exhibit significant changes in behavior or any of the above symptoms over an extended period of time.

We recognize that this natural disaster is impacting teachers, parents, and students. We want to support you as best we can. Please feel free to reach out if you would like me to speak with your child or need additional help. -Ms Weaver
