In the Fall of 1942, Nancy Love formed and led the Women's Auxiliary Ferrying Squadron (WAFS) comprised of 28 women who each had a minimum of 500 flying hours. That same year, Jacqueline Cochran was authorized to recruit female pilots to fly Army trainers and were dubbed the Women's Flying Training Detachment (WFTD). By the summer of 1943, Cochran was appointed Director of all Women Pilots and renamed the WAFS and WFTD as the Women Airforce Service Pilots. Learn more about the individuals who made up the WAFS and WASP.
