Long Term Care Riders, a New Solution

In this class, we will explore various approaches to long-term care planning, with a specific emphasis on a new concept called long-term care riders. Traditionally, long-term care insurance has operated on a “use it or lose it” basis, where if you don’t end up needing long-term care, your insurance premiums are essentially lost. However, the idea of long-term care riders introduces a fresh perspective. It involves incorporating long-term care coverage as an additional benefit to your life insurance policy. This means that even if you don’t require long-term care, the coverage can still be utilized as a part of your life insurance policy, ensuring that your premiums are not wasted. By delving into the concept of long-term care riders, we will explore how this approach can provide a more comprehensive and flexible solution for your long-term care needs. You will gain a deeper understanding of how this innovative concept can offer greater financial security and peace of mind, eliminating the “use it or lose it” aspect commonly associated with traditional long-term care insurance. Join this class to discover the potential benefits of long-term care riders and how they can enhance your overall long-term care planning strategy. Say goodbye to the fear of losing your insurance premiums and embrace a more flexible and comprehensive approach to long-term care coverage. Ages 21+

HEALTH & WELLNESS

Restorative Yoga & Ayurveda: A Seasonal Self-Care Practice

Take time for yourself after a long day to nourish your body and mind through the wisdom of Restorative Yoga and Ayurveda. This practice is designed to support your wellbeing as we transition into the fall and winter seasons—times when grounding, warmth, and inner resilience are especially needed.

In Ayurveda, October marks a pivotal seasonal shift out of the heat of Pitta season and into the cool, dry, and mobile qualities of Vata season. As the winds pick up, the air grows crisp, and the days shorten, our nervous systems can become overstimulated, our digestion irregular, and our minds scattered or anxious. This is the time of year when the body most deeply craves stillness, warmth, and nourishment — and when a mindful, grounding practice becomes not just beneficial, but essential. Restorative Yoga is one of the most powerful antidotes to Vata imbalance. By slowing down, holding supported postures, breathwork, stillness and mindful awareness will invite the nervous system to settle. We directly counter the erratic, airy energy that October tends to bring. Paired with Ayurvedic seasonal wisdom — understanding what to eat, how to rest, and how to rhythm your day — this practice becomes a complete toolkit for autumn wellbeing. Come onto your mat to:

- Relax and create spaciousness in body and mind
- Restore your energy and invite a deep sense of calm
- Learn seasonal Ayurvedic strategies for the Vata season — including how to eat, move, and live in harmony with October's shifting energy
- Develop tools to become less reactive and more joyful in daily life
- Build the grounding, warmth, and inner stability that carry you through the darker months ahead

This class is especially supportive if you've been feeling anxious, scattered, dry, fatigued, or ungrounded as the season changes — all classic signs that Vata is asking for your attention.

Please bring: A yoga mat, block, belt, blanket /towel and a pillow or cushion to sit on.
