CHS DAILY BULLETIN

SEPT 11

ANNOUNCEMENTS

- Twenty-five years ago today, our nation experienced an act of tragedy that changed our country and touched communities around the world. On September 11, 2001, nearly 3,000 people lost their lives, including first responders, military personnel, and innocent people simply going about their day. In the days and years that followed, we witnessed extraordinary courage, compassion, and a willingness to come together to support one another. Many of you were not yet born when September 11 happened. Yet remembering this day is important because history is not only about what happened—it is also about the people we choose to remember and the values we carry forward. Today, we remember those who lost their lives. We honor the first responders and countless others who demonstrated courage and selflessness. And we remember the families and communities whose lives were forever changed. As we observe this 25th anniversary, let us take a moment to reflect on the importance of compassion, courage, service, and looking out for one another. Please join me now in a moment of silence in remembrance of those who lost their lives on September 11, 2001, and in honor of all those whose lives were changed by that day.
