Impact Aid Parent-Pupil Survey Card Instructions

General Overview

Public Law 81-874 (Impact Aid) was created to help school divisions recover lost tax revenue resulting from the presence of tax-exempt federal properties such as military bases, Native American Indian Treaty Lands, national wildlife refuges, and low-rent housing properties. Each year, approximately 1,100 school divisions across the United States apply for Impact Aid funds by conducting a Parent-Pupil Survey to identify the number of federally connected students they serve. Based on this survey, the federal government provides funding to eligible school divisions to offset lost revenue to support public education. These funds go directly into the general operating budget and benefit all students by supporting student programs, teacher salaries, classroom technology, transportation, and many other essential services.
