REPORT OF GIVING

MESSAGE FROM HEAD OF SCHOOL

In his 18 years at Dublin School, perhaps no one gave to this place the way Brad did. He poured his heart and soul into this community, and over the past year I learned that he believed Dublin gave him even more in return.

That, in a sentence, is what this Report of Giving is about. Connection. Care. Appreciation. Awe. When we cultivate that kind of shared purpose and deep connection, something reciprocal takes hold. Brad's tenure is one example of that, and this report is full of others: the stories and generosity of the people who make up this community, giving to Dublin because Dublin has given so much to them.

Many of you already know that feeling in your own relationship with this school. Since my wife, Ellie, and I stepped onto this campus in October of 2025 for our interview, we've felt it too, walking into a school where that reciprocity was the norm.

This report celebrates Brad, the Dublin community, and all of you who have contributed in countless ways, ensuring that Dublin can continue giving young people what it has given you, or those you love.

Aimee Lord and her advancement team deserve real credit here too. Over the past two years, they wrapped up the Journey Campaign, navigated a major transition of leadership, and delivered their strongest Dublin Fund year to date. They've celebrated Brad and Lisa's remarkable tenure, while making sure Ellie and I have everything we need to begin this next chapter on solid footing. The past two years have demanded a great deal of the Advancement Office, but Aimee and her team continue to relish every chance to connect with you all and to strengthen these bonds further.

Brad often described Dublin School as the "best small boarding school in America." In the months ahead, I look forward to asking many of you to define what that looks like. My own answer is still taking shape, but I'm already convinced that the people, the place, and the history of this school have created something truly special. Together, we'll build on the foundation of philanthropy that has sustained Dublin for generations, ensuring that it continues to prepare young people to lead lives of meaning, truth, and courage.

I look forward to meeting many of you in the year ahead, hearing your stories, and thanking you personally for all you've done to make Dublin what it is today.

EIGHTEEN YEARS OF LEADERSHIP.

Written By Peter Imhoff

I don't know that anyone can capture Brad's impact on Dublin in a single page. I think only those who knew Dublin in the years immediately before his arrival can truly begin to appreciate the changes that occurred. Dublin had a great soul, but was missing pretty much everything else. The temptation is to start granularly listing his achievements, and those of the school under his watch. Academic excellence, college placement, athletic competitiveness, physical plant, student body size, and financial stability all soared during his tenure.

As impressive as that list is, it would not capture the essence of Dublin School under Brad.

Words failing, I default to a photograph I took about halfway through his tenure. Brad asked me to come by and take a quick photo. I don't remember the reason, but based on the metadata, I can only assume it was shortly before a mid-winter break. It was in the early evening, in the failing light, and I had to slow down the shutter speed and open the aperture to get the proper image exposure. That had the happy benefit of allowing the motion to smear, and thus convey the dynamism of the scene.

The things that stand out:

1 > THE JOY AND EXCITEMENT. It isn't just Brad. It is everyone in the photo. Students, faculty, administrators. Everyone loving the moment and enjoying each other. It speaks to the kind of community that he led.

2 > IS THERE ANY QUESTION WHO THE LEADER OF THE SCHOOL IS? Front and center, floating in the air, defying gravity? It is so obvious that it is almost easy to ignore.

3 > BRAD'S WILLINGNESS TO BE A LITTLE GOOFY WITH THE STUDENTS. He knew how to balance playfulness with the need to maintain authority. He worked to build a solid connection with the student body and was willing to step outside the usual confines of the role of the Head of School to do that. I can't imagine a picture like this from many (any?) other boarding schools.

4 > SNOW. DRIVING SNOW. OBVIOUSLY BRAD LOVES IT. If you are going to run a boarding school in the highlands of New Hampshire, you probably should. A large part of the school year is during the short, cold days of winter. For many, the dark and cold can be a challenge. Loving and embracing the cold and snow is a tremendous antidote to what might otherwise be hard and lonely.

5 > TAKING THE PICTURE IN FRONT OF THE SCHOOLHOUSE – THE TRADITIONAL HEART OF DUBLIN SCHOOL. While there are older historic buildings on campus, the Schoolhouse is the only one that the early Dublin students helped build. It bears witness to the early years of Dublin and the traditions and values that Brad re-instituted and reinforced.

We live in a world enamored of data. It would be easy to overwhelm with the many statistics supporting Brad's tenure. I don't want to lose the human element in the weight of numbers.

Dublin's success during Brad's tenure is a direct result of his attentiveness to the needs of the students of the Dublin community. Everything else grew organically out of that attention. Dublin is better for his care.

HOW WE BUILT THIS WITH BRAD BATES

The only person who dislikes the idea of dubbing the previous eighteen years at Dublin School as "The Bates Years" is Head of School Brad Bates himself. He insists that the School's transformation — from an institution with a very uncertain future to one of New England's most celebrated small boarding schools — has much less to do with him than people like David Fountain, Richard Simmons, David E. Howe, George Foote, Michael Lehmann, Peter Imhoff, Patricia Fletcher, Bill Cornell, and the countless other members of the Dublin School community who banded together to build a more certain future for the institution.

Written By Liam Sullivan

-Brad Bates

When Paul and Nancy Lehmann founded Dublin School in 1935, they did so in the midst of the worst economic crisis in modern history. Curiously, Brad began his tenure as Head of Dublin School in July of 2008 — the depths of yet another significant economic crisis. The markets were in turmoil, building starts had plummeted, and things looked very bad. Yet at Dublin School, a dawn was breaking.

The school had basically no endowment at the time,[2] and with limited revenue expected from endowment drawdowns anyways, Dublin was exposed to fewer liquidity issues than institutions with more significant endowments. To give just an idea of this asymmetry, Harvard entered 2008 with its endowment priced at $36.9 billion; by the end of 2009, that figure had declined 27%, representing a loss of over $11 billion in a single year. For a school like Harvard, endowment distributions represent at least a third of all operating revenue for a given year. At Dublin in 2008-2009, that figure was more like nothing, as we weren't taking a draw at all.

NEVER WASTE A CRISIS

So, while many educational institutions spent the Great Recession scrambling to protect their assets, Dublin School found itself with a somewhat unique and cautiously optimistic outlook on the situation. Spared from the headache of watching an endowment spiral in the wrong direction, Brad and the Board of Trustees turned their attention towards more tangible things. When the Fed began a series of aggressive rate cuts in early 2008, School leadership was able to secure cheap financing to stimulate an initial phase of capital development, which was further abetted by cheap labor and construction costs. The economic crisis was beginning to look like an opportunity.

"I remember my mother telling me to never waste a crisis. If you look hard enough, there's magic in a crisis. That's not to say that we enjoyed the crisis, but we had no choice but to move ahead. Building costs were close to $100 a square foot, where now they're probably $700. We didn't need a lot of money to get projects done, and we had people like Carl Von Mertens, George Foote, and Peter Imhoff on the Board and faculty — brilliant and generous people who could do a lot with very little."

In 2008, the first-ever campus master planning process was undertaken at Dublin School. Out of architect Randall Imai's plan came a series of interventions that began to remake campus into a place worthy of Brad's aspiration to make Dublin School the "best small boarding school in America."

The first recommendation was to reroute the delivery road bisecting campus to create a large central quad that strengthened the character of campus and reaffirmed Dublin's proximity to nature. With that began the process of creating a cohesive visual language for Dublin School, which Randall and school leadership did while remaining indebted to local architectural vernaculars and precedents found in historic campus buildings like Lehmann (Main House) and Hill House.

A BET ON THE FUTURE

As the new campus master plan was being completed, the Board made a prudential bet on the future by securing a low-cost loan to catalyze a flurry of development activity on campus. Besides creating momentum for subsequent fundraising efforts, the "bet" was hedged by a strategy to strengthen Dublin's "right to win" prospective students by strategically increasing the school's enrollment capacity through the addition of new beds. Though committed to remaining a small boarding school, there was indication that Dublin might be too small for many would-be matriculates.

"Well, we took on debt to build two new dormitories—Slopeside and Monadnock. We found it was easier to attract 50 kids to a slightly bigger school than 30 kids at the size we were maintaining back then (around 110 students). We knew the debt would pay for itself in short order through new tuition revenues. It's counterintuitive, but we were too small and were losing out on students who were great fits otherwise. When we started getting closer to 150 students, it became easier to enroll. And even with a considerably larger student population, Dublin was still a small school."

Each major capital project over the previous 18 years has been undertaken with the same clear eyes and exhaustive diligence. Even so, the school has successfully completed over 20 meaningful capital projects that have created spaces for students, faculty, alumni, and members of the broader School community to pursue opportunities across academic, residential, athletic, artistic, and other areas of School life. On the campus of Dublin School today, students can peer into space at the Perkin Observatory, train and compete at world-class ski facilities, gather with friends to eat and appreciate panoramic views of the Wapack Range, engage fiercely with ideas around the Harkness table, shoot pool with their friends, and return to dorms that feel like home.

JUST WAITING FOR A VISION

Brad's appointment as Head of School, though coincident with a period of great economic challenge, also rode a wave of hope, excitement, and openness that has carried Dublin through the previous eighteen years. Former Associate Head of School for Advancement Erika Rogers had excelled at engaging and cultivating a donor base that was, in Brad's words, "just waiting for a vision. There was a ton of energy that had gone untapped. I wouldn't even ask for money. I would just say, 'What do you think about this idea?' and they would say, 'How do we make this happen?' It was incredible." Except for Slopeside and Monadnock dormitories, capital improvements to the campus of Dublin School since 2008 have been achieved exclusively through the generosity of Dublin's alumni, parents, and broader community of friends.

Older alumni were especially energetic and quick to show their support for the school when Brad first hit the road in late 2008. After finding a ready audience in these reengaged alumni from the '40s and '50s, Dublin School returned to its roots in a big way.

"These alumni who were at Dublin in the '40s and '50s remembered high academic standards. They had great memories of skiing and being outdoors on our beautiful campus, and programs like Workgang mattered a lot to them. When I said these were all elements of the student experience I wanted to lean into, they were fired up and wanted to know how to help."

Fundraising is all about relationships and momentum. The completion of the Perkin Observatory in 2008 was a spark that caught wind and enkindled the belief that Dublin School was a horse to bet on, drawing erstwhile supporters who had been disengaged or hesitant to support the school back into the fold.

"I HAVE A SECRET."

Soon after the Perkin Observatory opened, Brad received a call from David Fountain '73, who said he would be flying down from Nova Scotia and wanted to meet. Brad, only in his second year as Head of Dublin School and still learning the ropes as a fundraiser, responded with complete lack of tact by asking Mr. Fountain to wait while he checked his calendar. The summer prior, Brad, David Howe, and Carl Ladd had met with Mr. Fountain in Newport, Rhode Island, where the latter spoke fondly about working with Jan Haman in Dublin's theatre productions, and asked to hear about Dublin's plans for the performing arts.

When they met later that year, Brad and Mr. Fountain resumed talks about Dublin's theatre program. Mr. Fountain asked Brad to tell him about the largest gift in Dublin's history, $800,000 at the time:

"Well, my mother says I need to donate to Dublin. I wasn't really excited about it, but I want to do it," he said.

CAMPUS MASTER PLAN THAT RESHAPED DUBLIN

THOUSANDS
STUDENTS WHOSE EXPERIENCE HAS BEEN TRANSFORMED

-Brad Bates

He promised a $1.2 million donation to the School’s theatre program in honor of Jan Haman, but Brad first had to demonstrate that a new theatre could be built for that amount. He challenged Brad to return in four months with a plan, and — here’s the kicker — he was not allowed to tell anyone besides Lisa, his wife, that this donation was on the table.

“I was shaking with excitement. This was a huge deal, especially during hard times. I called Randall Imai, who had done the campus master plan, and I was like, ‘I have a secret. Can you help me do this?’ We started touring theatres around Boston the very next week.”

Months later, Brad came to the Board with a hand-drawn rendering of the new theatre, courtesy of Randall. “If you say yes, I have the money to build it,” he said. From the Fountain Arts Building, to the Dublin School Outdoor Center, the Endurance Sport Program, Camp Nielsen, and every project in between, Brad’s so-called “vision” and his ability to bring it to life has been supercharged by the energy, ingenuity, generosity, and partnership of people like David Fountain, who found a school with a clear sense of purpose and a plan for pursuing it.

These were people like David Howe H’95, former President of the Board, who would twist people’s arms until they agreed to join the Board. Through Mr. Howe’s unyielding methods came others, like George Foote, Ned Whitney, and Peter Imhoff, the people behind “Brad’s vision.”

“How many schools have an MIT engineer on their board who wants to get their hands dirty? George is brilliant. When we were building Gillespie and the Spencer Student Center, we had $1.3 million on hand. The initial estimate for the project was $1.5 million. We didn’t know what to do. George looked at the plans and noticed this squint junction, this little crick where the Student Center was supposed to begin. He said, ‘Why don’t we just straighten this out?’ The architects went back and forth with the construction guy and they’re like, ‘That’s $150,000.’ And I said, ‘I like straight. We can do this.’”

MAYBE I’VE BEEN A CONDUCTOR

Outside of independent schools, Brad is best known for his role in establishing the Dublin School Outdoor Center, a world-class cross-country skiing center and trail network on the campus of Dublin School. Many believe that the Outdoor Center was an idea that emerged out of the blue, as some profound act of genius. That is a mistaken perception. The Outdoor Center began very modestly in Brad’s mind before snowballing into what it is today. As Brad tells it, he was preparing to send Workgangs out with shovels and pickaxes when Michael Lehmann said that, actually, he wanted Dublin to hire the best trailbuilder, and he would plan to continue giving to support future development.

“The Outdoor Center is a great example of how these past 18 years have gone. I did not have a big vision for that project. Everyone else’s vision was much bigger than mine, especially Michael Lehmann’s. Even today, people will tell me ‘Brad, your vision for the Nordic Center is incredible.’ I’m like, ‘Yeah, no.’ These past 18 years have been about listening and collaborating, and sometimes sitting on ideas and letting them percolate, waiting for the moment when they’ll find traction. Maybe I’ve been a conductor, but I’m not a visionary.”

WE'VE GOT MOXIE

Written By Anne Mackey

HOW A DRINK HELPED TO BUILD A CULTURE OF CARING AND KINDNESS

When I was younger, usually on a hot summer day, my dad would come home with this mysterious orange can. He didn't do this very often, and I think now that it was because he wanted us to forget and he could pull his prank all over again. When my brothers and I would show interest in this forbidden "soda" he would get a twinkle in his eye, knowing he was about to unleash a taste on us that we had not experienced before. Our faces would pucker and we would react as if someone had just made us drink mud. My memory tells me that it tasted like someone pulled the roots out of some wild plant, dirt and all, added some water and somehow made it fizz and magically we have Moxie soda. I remember that you could rarely find it in the general store. Not because everyone was buying it, but because they didn't sell enough to keep it in stock.

My dad would always take a big sip with enthusiasm and say, "This will fix what's ailing you." Years later I learned that Moxie wasn't originally invented as a soft drink at all. It began in 1884 as medicine created by Maine Physician Dr. Augustin Thompson. Its herbal bittersweet flavor comes from gentian root, and somewhere along the way the drink gave us the word "moxie" — meaning courage, determination, and nerve.

About a year after Brad Bates arrived, he announced something called the Moxie Award. My first thought was, "How is this supposed to be an award?" Then again, maybe drinking Moxie really does take courage.

Any faculty, staff, or student could email Brad directly — yes, a student could email the Head of School directly — nominating someone for this award. The award is given at the next available morning meeting in front of the entire student body, and recognizes Moxie in our School community. The range of nominations has grown over the years from very basic nominations to very elaborate and eloquent nominations.

BRAD'S INBOX

MOXIE NOMINATIONS IN THEIR OWN WORDS

Dear Mr. Bates
(our Moxie lord and savior),

I would like to nominate this person for a Moxie Award because of their continued joy and liveliness that is brought each and every day. She makes the class fun and excited while covering a lot of ground through the AP curriculum. I was having a particularly bad day, and she checked in on me and was there for me when I needed it the most.

For these reasons, and many more, I would like to nominate Ms. Jackson for a Moxie Award!!

Sincerely,
Anonymous

Dear Mr. Bates,

On a beautiful March morning in Chile, a group of young people, and one not young person, charged up the side of Villarica Volcano for a hiking experience of a lifetime. As the group ascends, the one “not young” lady starts to fall behind. Try as she might, she could not keep up with the young people. About a half hour into the hike, it was just her, one other "not young" stranger, and the mountain guide traveling at turtle speed. When she looked up, from out of nowhere appears a young man coming towards her from down the mountain. Before she knew it, there stood Cole, next to her offering help. He offered to carry her 20lb backpack to ease her load. Mind you, he was already carrying his own 20lb backpack!

This thoughtful young man separated from his group, ran down the mountain (and back up again), all to come check on me, and offer help. It warmed my heart, and restored faith in me that chivalry is not dead.

Thank you, Cole!

Sincerely,
Lynn Johns, RN, BSN

Dear Mr. Bates,

I would like to nominate Audrey for an overdue Moxie Award. While I was hiking the Pumpelly trail during Mountain Day, I decided to do my best Batman impression and try flying. This didn’t bode well for me and I ended up spraining my ankle and started crying like a baby. Audrey then swooped in with extreme composure, assessed the situation, and wrapped my ankle perfectly. If not for her, Anhalt and Weis would have had to carry me down the mountain and I don’t think either of them get paid enough for that.

Sincerely,
Elijah

MOXIE RELISH

HISTORIC MEMORABILIA

The admissions bathroom became the "Moxie Museum." Visiting families always asked, "What's with all the Moxie?" It became the most common question in our Revisit Day Family Feud surveys. Visiting teams won cans of Moxie at races. During construction of the Brett Smith Dining Commons, someone painted the subfloor bright orange with the logo across it — leaving a surprise for whoever tears up that floor a hundred years from now.

As people embraced the tradition, gifts began arriving from alumni, parents, and friends of the School. Hats, signs, antique bottles, books, artwork, homemade airplanes built from empty cans — even Moxie relish. The museum kept growing because people wanted to be part of the story.

Brad understood something important: traditions aren't announced, they're cultivated. So, he talked endlessly about Moxie. He insisted it had to be served ice cold. He claimed we had emptied every store in the Monadnock region. Rumor had it Coca-Cola had to increase Moxie production just to keep up with Dublin School. One day there was even a story that an entire Moxie tractor trailer had arrived on campus.

Then came the final Morning Meeting of 2026 — Brad's final Morning Meeting. Like always, I thought I knew exactly what was going to happen. I didn't. Brad called my name for a nomination for a Moxie Award written by him. Of all other Moxie Awards that had been handed out over the years, more than a thousand by then, somehow, I received the last one.

I still don't know who received the first can, but I know exactly who received the last. And in that moment, I realized I became a part of a tradition that had connected thousands of people through simple acts of courage, kindness, generosity, and gratitude.

Over the years, more than a thousand cans of Moxie were handed out. More importantly, more than a thousand moments of courage and kindness were noticed. Hundreds of students found the confidence to email the Head of School because someone else deserved to be celebrated. I have no doubt the tradition will continue. It may look different. It may evolve. But every one of us who was part of it will remember what it meant.

I will never forget the day Brad took out a bowl, poured cereal in it, then used Moxie as you would milk, and raved about how great it was to start his day like this.

There is one question that I suspect will never truly be answered: Did Brad Bates actually like the taste of Moxie?

MR. BATES DAY

"The day started beautifully as we laughed, cried, and sang together."

Hi! We're Alaria Clauss and Hayden Anderson, last year's student body President and Vice President. We have a confession: we spent months plotting behind Mr. Bates's back. Alongside his partner-in-crime, Ms. Mackey, we planned an entire day devoted to surprising and celebrating the man who has shaped Dublin School (and us) more than he probably realizes.

Planning this event was very time consuming and elaborate. There were many meetings held in the privacy of the downstairs classrooms of the Lehmann House throughout the winter with the Student Government to brainstorm, modify, and revise ideas. The first brainstorm was a huge success, leaving us with countless ideas. Some of which came to fruition, while others stayed ideas in the planning document (maybe for the best!). Ideas ranged from hiring a hawk to follow Mr. Bates around for the day — a nod to Skatutakee, the hawk that nests near his house — to having the entire school give him a Moxie toast. After narrowing down the ideas, we decided on a select amount to put our full energy into to make happen.

Our first brainstorming session with Student Government gave us a long list of activities and celebrations and we wanted to make as many of them happen as we could. The most important part however, was keeping it a secret from both him and the rest of the students. Several groups formed with their individual goals of planning the Batesathalon, orchestrating Morning Meeting, planning school wide games, afternoon Quad activities, and much much more.

When the day itself arrived, the plans were set. The day prior, Finn F. '27, Quinten B. '27, and Wesley J. '29 asked Mr. Bates to do a morning Beech Hill hike. He agreed and while on the hike, the students stalled as much as possible to make him late for Morning Meeting. When they finally arrived, the whole School was waiting with an applause and saxophone-filled welcome. The Morning Meeting was hosted by Maia C. '27 and Oleh L. '28 and included a rambunctious game of Family Feud, hosted by Mr. Bates himself. The outgoing Head of School was also the recipient of many honors, including 18 Moxie Awards, a video created by DSEN of students' and faculties' favorite Mr. Bates memories, an honorary diploma declaring Mr. Bates a member of the Class of 2026, and a whole school Moxie toast. The day started beautifully as we laughed, cried, and sang together. The morning followed with a game of Capture the Flag on Upper Field — where the Juniors came out victors — and then Mr. Bates's favorite lunch: Wrap Day. Dublin Alumni will remember Wrap Day as the best day in the dining hall where you get to customize your wrap — an amazing lunch that is time consuming and a bit stressful for the kitchen. Georgette and her team handled it with ease!

The afternoon was filled with fun activities on the Quad: a bounce house, cookies to decorate that looked like Mr. Bates's face, volleyball, cornhole, Moxie floats, and the main event—the Batesathalon. The Batesathalon was a race starting from the top of the Norm "Pro" Wight Ski Hill, through Upper Field, down the New Dorm Hill, and finally ending on the Quad with various stops and challenges along the way. Many gold painted Moxie Awards were handed out with first place going to Quinten B. '27. Mr. Bates received both the Mr. Bates Award and the Dead Last Award with Stanton A. '29 winning an award for following him with the saxophone the entire way. Overall, the day was a huge success with lots of joy and Mr. Bates love.

WATCH THE DUBLIN COMMUNITY CELEBRATE BRAD'S 18 YEARS OF LEADERSHIP.

LETTER OF RECOMMENDATION

Written by Will Smith '27

It is my privilege to write a recommendation letter for our former Head of School, Bradford Bates. Mr. Bates's accomplishments while acting as Head of Dublin School for the past 18 years have been nothing short of institution-defining. Parents, faculty, and alumni can undoubtedly attest to the remarkable growth that has occurred at Dublin under his leadership. I will leave the recounting of those incredible feats to them. Instead, I want to introduce you to Mr. Bates as he is known to the students at Dublin School, in the hope of explaining to you what exactly makes him so worthy of our esteem as an educator and as a person.

The culture at Dublin has grown to reflect Mr. Bates to such a degree that they are inseparable. Dublin is a place where students are accepted for who they are, even if they are still figuring out who that may be. On any given day, students will experience this acceptance through a handshake or high-five on the way to Morning Meeting, a smile upon entering a classroom, or a good-natured battle of wits with their teacher. Dublin students are always willing to help when a peer faces a challenge, and can expect to receive that help in turn from anyone in our tight-knit community. There is an open invitation to join a conversation in the Brett Smith Dining Commons or the Schoolhouse, but also permission to seek out a quiet space in the library for a moment of solitude. Put simply, Dublin's culture is uniquely welcoming, supportive, and inclusive, and this is not a culture that formed by accident.

Dublin's culture reflects the values Mr. Bates embodied every day he came to work at 18 Lehmann Way. Mr. Bates values respect, kindness, and appreciation for differences, and believes that everyone can carve out their own place in our community because we all deserve to belong.

During a Morning Meeting at the very beginning of this past school year, Mr. Bates announced that by the end of the week, he would know the name of every student on campus. This sounded impossible to me because the incoming class was less than a week old. Two days later, Mr. Bates stood before the School and correctly greeted every single student by name, additionally identifying those who were not present in the recital hall that morning. This wasn't a memory test for him; it was an expression of his core belief that every member of the Dublin community matters; we are all worthy of being known.

Mr. Bates didn't just learn the names of his students; he made an effort to build genuine relationships with each of us. There is no doubt in my mind that any member of the classes of 2009 through 2029 can attest to the incredible efforts he made in the pursuit of connection. Mr. Bates is a leader who engaged his community in the conversations we cared about most. Whether they were about music, science, sports, or my own obscure fascination with the history of our School,

“I will never forget what Mr. Bates’s version of leadership looked like, and, more importantly, what it felt like.”

-Will Smith ’27

Mr. Bates also taught us that we can and should do hard things, and he consistently showed up to support those efforts. On my junior year white water rafting trip in Maine this spring, he literally paddled alongside me in the raft as we conquered the rapids. On a misty Saturday morning, he unexpectedly appeared at my team’s crew race after a run — not because he was required to be there, but because he wanted to support his students.

High school students often strive for perfection — perfect grades, perfect extracurriculars, perfect social lives — but Mr. Bates always reminded us that it is okay to get things wrong and to make mistakes. We are growing; we are still kids, and being awkward is part of the experience. Maybe because he knew we needed a tangible reminder of this fact, he joined us in the recital hall every year during the Winterfest lip sync in a ridiculously bright suit that he probably bought on Amazon, shades, and some sort of ridiculous hat or wig, singing and dancing with us like there was no tomorrow.

But Mr. Bates also knew when a moment required a serious tone. Some of the most meaningful moments I had with him were when he was helping our community make sense of complex topics, frustrating world events, or polarizing international conflicts. He modeled respect for the perspectives of every member of our community and encouraged us to listen more carefully to one another, with curiosity and a willingness to learn.

I will never forget what Mr. Bates’s version of leadership looked like, and, more importantly, what it felt like. Like many high school students, I am constantly observing the world around me. I see the examples set by our world’s leaders, people who often display their power over others in dangerous and destructive ways, who pursue self-aggrandizement, who cannot admit their mistakes, uncertainties, or imperfections, and who hide anything about themselves that could be perceived as weakness. Mr. Bates, in my mind, is the antithesis of this model of leadership; he is a courageous, honorable, and admirable leader. At Dublin, he led by empowering others, prioritizing others, and giving credit to others, and he did all of that with quiet confidence, without clinging to a need to be right, certain, or perfect.

What does it feel like to be in the presence of a true leader like Mr. Bates? Once you meet him, you will instantly know.

Sincerely,

WILL SMITH

The expansion and improvements of the School over the years has been phenomenal. And Brad's unwavering and visionary development of the Nordic ski area and mountain biking track are a few examples of how much he has given. Thank you, Brad, for all that you've done."

JAMES COLE '66 & DIANE COLE

"Brad welcomed Diane and I to the Dublin Campus to interact with students about careers in science. He and Erika Rogers met with us whenever they came to Washington, DC and kept us informed about what was happening at Dublin.

All one has to do is compare Dublin today to Dublin when Brad arrived to celebrate his and Dublin's successes."

CHRISTOPHER & CYNTHIA DAY
FORMER FACULTY

"Brad has conducted the 'Little Engine that Could' with a gardener's care for 18 solid years. So grateful to him for all of us who once shoveled coal in that worthy locomotive and so proud of his accomplishments for Dublin."

AMANI NATSON '18

"Brad made my experience at Dublin wonderful. He was able to allow me to create a safe space for BIPOC students at Dublin which meant the world to me! I'm forever grateful for Brad and his ability to inspire students and faculty. I am wishing him nothing but the best on his new journey!"

RICHARD WHITNEY
FRIEND OF THE SCHOOL

"He has vision.

My father Edward Whitney, former member of the Board of Trustees, said of Brad, 'He has vision.' Brad has certainly shown us that over the last 18 years."

NICOLAS SILITCH '79 & REGINA SILITCH

"Brad has transformed the School to a vibrant hub for learning and exploration.

We wish him all the best on his next chapter and thank him for all his years of hard work and dedication."

BERNARDA DEL VILLAR
FORMER FACULTY

"Brad has been a true friend and exceptional leader. He helped both of my kids while they were at Dublin. He supported them in their Nordic sport and he was always looking out for them. In my time at boarding schools I have not met a genuine person like Brad. I miss working with him. Inolvidable [unforgettable]!!!"

NATHANIEL "BUDDY" BATES '52, GP '17, '19

"He is my son, and I am so proud of his many accomplishments for Dublin School, my Alma Mater.

In addition to fulfilling the plans outlined by the Long Range Planning Committee prior to his arrival to Dublin School, Brad put the School on the 'map' when he hired a professional to redesign all the cross country ski trails on Beech Hill and added snow making for not only most of the trails but on new slopes above the Memorial Field."

BILL & KAREN LIMERO, P '10

"As parents of a 2010 graduate, Brad and Dublin have always made our family feel like part of the Dublin family and community. Our son Ryan, who when he first arrived at Dublin was an introvert and after being exposed to different teaching styles and nowhere to hide, flourished both academically and socially. Brad constantly checked in with Ryan just to make sure he was making the adjustment to Dublin as seamless as possible. Ryan went on to graduate from Elmira College with honors, then became a teacher at an elementary school in NH, then became an associate principal at a middle school in NH, and now was just promoted to Principal at an elementary school in NH. Much of Ryan's success is attributed to Brad and the Dublin community. Brad will definitely be missed! My wife and I will miss him at the kickoff in August and the Christmas get together. Good luck with all of your future endeavors."

JOHN SCRIVEN '16

"My freshman year, Brad successfully pressured me into trying Nordic skiing. I was not good at it nor did I enjoy it. However, up until this point, I had only ever played soccer. My Nordic experience taught me to be comfortable being bad at something and encouraged me to try new things, even if I might embarrass myself at first."

LARS HENRICKSON '25

"He was always there for me and even met with me in person when I was struggling. He was always there for me and he wanted to see the best in me. Even in my worst moments he was there to hold me up and to push me forward. He has impacted my time at Dublin extremely positively as he was always a smiling face and an amazing person to talk to."

DAN & MARY ANN FOWLER, P '13, '16, '18

"Brad is an incredible visionary.

He is supportive, inclusive, and authentic."

ROBERT O'DONNELL & MEREDITH REED O'DONNELL, P '28

"The 'Accepted to Dublin' videos created by Brad and team make an immediate impact and connection with incoming students and their families. From that first video to Opening Day to Grandparents' Day to events in between, we have been so appreciative of Brad's sincerity and sense of humor; belief in each student as an individual and an essential member of the community; and dedication to honoring the traditions and standards so emblematic of Dublin while encouraging the school to grow.

It can make all the difference in the world — especially for students at this stage — to be seen, heard, and appreciated (and challenged!), and we thank Brad for making our son and entire family feel welcomed into the community. We are fortunate, and we thank you!"

2026 GRADUATION SPEECHES

“We have planted seeds — some have sprouted, and some will germinate in the years to come.”

-Brad Bates

BRADFORD BATES

Head of School

“What if we created space for students to try things they never imagined trying? What if we established a culture in which it is okay to nerd out, be fully curious, and acknowledge that you are inspired by your peers? What if we were to lean into the idea that you have to work extremely hard, often for long periods, to experience real joy and a sense of personal and shared accomplishment? ... What happens when a community asks these questions each and every day during the school year? Magic happens. You get the class you see here on stage. While they are unfinished humans, the questions they have considered will fill a backpack that they will carry from here as they face the challenges and opportunities that await. We have planted seeds, some have sprouted, and some will germinate in the years to come.”

LIZ PEYTON-LEVINE

English Department Chair

“But what I want you to know, in your hearts of hearts, is that you know who you truly are, and you have everything you need to be happy. And now, I would like to invite everyone who has come here to honor the Class of 2026 to please raise both your hands up, high in the air, and keep them until the end (I promise to be brief). And, I am going to ask the graduates to gaze upon this field of helping hands. These are the people who see you. They celebrate you. And they all want you to know that should you ever find yourself lost in the forest, their hands will help guide you home.”

JULIANA ARAUJO

Class of 2026

“Being a kind person is like being a body builder. They do not achieve the build with one workout — it takes time and commitment. In the same way, being a kind person isn’t just one act of kindness or one way of being — it takes many forms. It’s teachers who stay late after class, who answer one more question, and who believe in us before we believe in ourselves... We often forget how important those small actions can be, how much they can impact a person’s day, and how much change you can bring to a person’s entire life. It might be a small act for you, but for others it’s a turning point in their life which encourages them to keep going. It can be what makes someone realize who they want to be.”

HELEN REN

Class of 2026

"For the past four years, we've been encouraged to seek answers. We've been taught to look for the most effective way to communicate, the most logical way to solve a problem, and the most reliable way to plan for the future. We often assumed that if we followed the map, the journey would be perfectly predictable. We thought if we just worked hard enough, we could avoid the detours. But if I'm honest, the moments I remember most were never the ones that went according to the script."

MICHAEL LEHMANN

Class of 1959, former Head of School

"Dublin has prepared you well by providing many opportunities to explore new academic areas, new activities, and new sports in a very supportive environment. It has encouraged you to be curious and adventurous. In the years ahead, continue to explore and to be curious and adventurous. In your lives you will have some difficult times. Remember the personal strengths and endurance you have developed at Dublin. I wish you all the best as you begin this next phase of your lives."

"In the years ahead, continue to explore and to be curious and adventurous."

-Michael Lehmann '59, former Head of School

PAUL W. LEHMANN AWARD WINNER:

HAYDEN ANDERSON

By Brad Bates

"The winner of the year's Lehmann Award has taught many of us about leadership. Those who witnessed Hayden Anderson helping to plan a holiday for the whole School this spring remarked on how effectively she included others in planning and executing the event. She helped bring out the voices of the younger members of the Student Government, delegated tasks to them, offered support, and trusted them to get their jobs done. She spoke confidently to the faculty about their roles in the day, conjuring images of a potential future Dublin Head of School. In true Hayden fashion, she never makes a big deal about herself; she always focuses on others and works tirelessly to make Dublin a better place to live and work."

A MESSAGE OF THANKS

By Aimee Lord, Associate Director of Advancement

When preparing the final numbers for our Report of Giving this year, I wanted to include some statistics that we don't normally write about, but we diligently record — years of giving history. In our report, we denote years of giving history with a little star next to your name. One star means you've been giving for five years, two stars mean you've been giving for 10 years, and three stars means you've been giving for 15 years or more.

I was thrilled to see that one quarter of our total donors have been giving for 15+ years. That's funding for over 15 years of Winterfests. That's funding for over 15 years of Morning Meetings. That's funding for over 15 years of Dublin graduates that leave our School ready to launch into the world with a solid educational foundation.

The generosity of those who have given over the past 15 years demonstrates the trust and appreciation our community feels for the steady leadership of longtime Head of School, Brad Bates.

During his time at Dublin, Brad helped raise the endowment from $1 million to over $21 million. He helped increase enrollment well beyond the 110 students on campus when he began in 2008. He partnered with the Board of Trustees to turn good ideas into reality through partnerships with our dedicated alumni, local foundations, and people who just believed in his vision. It's this vision that changed the Quad from a parking lot into the heart of campus, just the beginning of a long list of improvements to nearly every space on campus.

The list of names that follows shows the dedication and trust our community has put into Dublin and Brad's leadership in his final year as Head Teacher at Dublin School. As Dublin transitions leadership from Brad Bates to Sam Bicknell, we hope you'll continue to place your trust in our community as we move forward together into this exciting new era. Dublin has always been championed by supporters who want to see Dublin grow, innovate, and push the limits of what we knew was possible. The names on the following pages reflect not just generosity, but a shared belief in Dublin School's mission and vision for the future. Thank you for being part of this story.
