What is a School-Family Pact?

The School-Family Pact is an agreement developed jointly by parents/guardians, students, staff, and teachers. It outlines how parents, students, and teachers will share responsibility for student learning. This pact helps connect school and home in the learning process.

Developed jointly

Parents, students, and staff at Langston Hughes High School collaboratively developed this School-Family Compact for Student Achievement. After receiving feedback from Qualtrics, teachers suggested at-home activities to reinforce learning from school. Parents suggested ways to work with their children at home to ensure they understood the material and reinforced their learning. Students provided feedback on how these strategies would help them achieve their academic goals. This compact is specifically designed to meet the needs and objectives of our school and our students. It is reviewed annually to adapt to evolving student needs.

Parents may submit comments on the agreement at any time during the school year. The comment form is available on the school website, in the main office/student services, and in the Parent Resource Center (room 236).

Focus areas

Focusing on literacy at the high school level is essential because it serves as the foundation for academic success across all content areas. Strong literacy skills empower students to think critically, communicate effectively, and engage meaningfully with complex texts, whether in science, history, mathematics, or the arts. By prioritizing literacy, we are able to equip students not only to perform well on assessments but also to thrive in postsecondary education and the workforce, where reading comprehension and written communication are vital. A school-wide literacy focus ensures that every teacher becomes a literacy teacher, reinforcing these skills in every classroom and helping close achievement gaps.
