AMERICAN SPIRITS

BARB ROSENSTOCK

RAP. RAP. RAP.

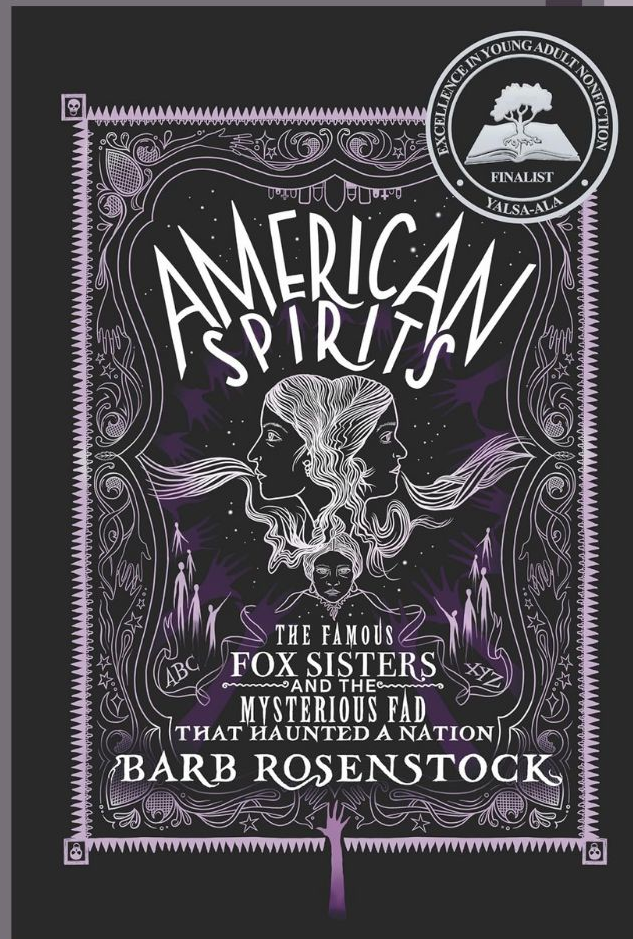

Can the dead really talk to the living? In 1848, three sisters claimed they could communicate with the dead—and America was fascinated.

But were Maggie, Kate & Leah truly speaking to spirits... or was something else going on?

A New York Public Library Book of the Year & Young Adult Nonfiction Award Finalist!

Discover the strange true story of the Fox Sisters and the fad that captivated—and haunted—a nation.

Stop by the Media Center and check it out!

BEANSTACK CHALLENGE: FALL INTO READING

Any student or staff member who logs at least 300 minutes in Beanstack from October 15th–November 20th will be entered to win a $50 giftcard

The background of the poster is a grey, textured surface with white and red curved lines. It features black silhouettes of a male basketball player in mid-air on the left and a female basketball player in mid-air on the right. There are three basketballs: one in the top left, one in the center, and one in the bottom left corner. The text 'BASKETBALL TRYOUTS' is written in large, bold, white capital letters with a black outline. The text 'BOYS' is written in a smaller, white, handwritten-style font. The text 'OCTOBER 19TH AND 20TH' is written in a white, handwritten-style font. The time '3:45-6:00pm' is written in a white, bold, sans-serif font and is circled with an orange line. The text 'GIRLS' is written in a smaller, white, handwritten-style font. The text 'OCTOBER 19TH AND 21ST' is written in a white, handwritten-style font. The time '5:45-7:30pm' is written in a white, bold, sans-serif font and is circled with an orange line. A yellow rectangular box with black text is located at the bottom left.
