Honors English 9
Program of Studies Description

Honors English 9:

Students will focus on reading, writing, speaking, and listening and will participate in close reading opportunities that support text analysis. This course will include higher-order text-dependent questions to promote deeper thinking about texts. Students will read, critically interpret, and respond in writing to themes such as, but not limited to survival, promise and progress, love, and technology. Students will read, understand, and respond to informational text as well as literary fiction – with an emphasis on comprehension, connections among ideas and between texts, and textual evidence. An emphasis on the writing process, specifically writing with a “defined” perspective, purpose, and to a particular audience, will help students complete writing prompts and a research paper using MLA format. An in-depth study of grammar (especially parts of speech, sentence parts, punctuation, and capitalization) will be combined with an intense study of vocabulary to help students excel on standardized tests and be college and career-ready. This course will challenge students to think more critically and more independently.
