Davies psychology learners are putting brains on the menu at the Zombie Café on Thursday. Twenty-three groups have created restaurant storefronts and menus serving every zombie's favorite meal, brains. The project showcases the students' knowledge of the brain, its parts, and each part's functions.

The restaurants will be presented together in a project fair atmosphere with the students sharing information they have researched about the human brain. Each restaurant will feature a poster board with facts and information about the human brain as well as the offerings of their eateries.

The psychology class has invited all adults in the building to visit their zombie café. Snacks and refreshments will be served, but no real brains will be eaten.
